

TRIED JUMP TO BE FREE, WAYWARD GIRL MAY DIE

From Baltimore, fifteen years old, in flying of a broken back to Bellevue Hospital. She leaped from the balcony of the House of the Good Shepherd, at Avenue A and Ninety-sixth Street, last night into an enclosed courtyard twenty feet below.

For more than a year Irene, grown to a woman's stature and a beauty of the dark haired, blue eyed, baby faced type, has caused sorrow to her mother, Mrs. George Haiman, who lives at No. 240 East Forty-third Street.

The girl repeatedly ran away from home. She was committed to an institution at Peekskill and to the House of Sisters on her mother's petition. On a promise to be good Irene was allowed to go home last summer. She went out on an errand and was not heard from until she was recognized in Jefferson Market Court a month ago. She showed the effects of malice.

The Sisters believe she had a desperate hope of escaping. She escaped from one of the other institutions where she was committed.

Pure, sweet milk is already mixed in it. Much more delicious, too.

CASSIUS READ DIES SUDDENLY, AGED 83; HIS FORTUNE GONE

End Comes While Financier Was Visiting an Old Friend.

HAD STORMY CAREER.

Once the Friend of E. S. Stokes and Later His Bitter Enemy.

Cassius H. Read, once a millionaire, a famous figure among New Yorkers a generation ago and the man who befriended Ed Stokes, the murderer of Jim Fisk, died suddenly yesterday afternoon during a visit to his old friend, Mrs. Evelyn Day, at No. 110 Lexington Avenue. He was eighty-three years old, and for several years had been living at No. 970 Lexington Avenue.

Read always felt that his loss of fortune was directly due to Stokes, who was his partner in the management of the Hoffman House, one of the most famous hostilities in the country at that time, and deeply resented the manner in which Stokes turned against him.

In a letter published in a New York newspaper over his signature in December, 1902, Read wrote concerning his entanglements with the law:

"I have decided contempt for Edward S. Stokes, whom I consider responsible for all these persecutions. When he was on trial for his life I befriended him, though he had no claim on me, and on his return from Sing Sing I received him and finally took him in partnership with me in the Hoffman House."

"Since then he has deprived me of all my property. He got the deed of my place on Long Island (Far Rockaway), worth $100,000, in order to go surety on a bond for $15,000, and refused to deed it back to me. . . . In the Hoffman House he had hundreds of thousands of mine. Having thus taken everything from me, while if I had my own I would be independent, I am now greatly embarrassed and left to contend with him in all his secret and untiring efforts to crush and get rid of me. He has escaped justice so long that he had become very bold, but I think justice will reach him at last."

Read's life twenty years ago was a chronicle of court appearance. Suit followed suit against him. In 1893 a referee decided that he owed Stokes more than $800,000. The Hoffman House Corporation, of which he was once the head, eventually sued him for $14,000 and obtained judgment. A breach of promise suit, brought by Clara M. Totten, was decided against him with a penalty of $15,000. Stokes obtained judgments against him; his fortune dwindled dollar by dollar until his friends said that there was just enough left to yield a competence for his coming age.

But when Stokes was buried in 1901, Read, white haired and bent, who had spent a fortune in the dead man's defense, was one of the chief mourners. In the course of Read's visit to Mrs. Day yesterday she prepared a late luncheon for him, and when she went to summon him to table she found him dead. He was a bachelor.

The John Wanamaker Store

Formerly A. T. Stewart & Co. Broadway at Ninth.

About Monday's Editorial a Question Is Asked

A customer asks: "Did you mean to say in Monday's editorial that in the regular order of your business, without any attempt to consolidate your October receipts of new goods with goods held over or retarded, or with advance Christmas shipments in October, you had actually delivered to you at your business buildings and put on sale in your own buildings to sell to the general public three million eight hundred and seventy thousand dollars of merchandise, valued at the prices you paid the manufacturers for it?"

That's exactly what we mean.

1—The October volume was not increased by any other month's deliveries.

2—The amount in dollars stands actually larger than stated Monday. The amount given is at cost without adding a penny for profits.

The big pipes of the water mains under the city streets, which almost any woman could walk through without stooping, must run with water steadily and flush the pipes daily to keep clean and be fresh for the city's needs.

So Must the Big Pipes of Store Supplies

be flushed daily to keep the store stocks clean and fresh. Taking our customers into our confidence, nearly four millions of dollars of goods coming in of a single month does not always represent the volume of sales in a single month; but in this October our output of sales exceeded the incoming volume of supplies.

All the foregoing is for the information of our interested employees and the thousands of buyers to whom the Store is almost a home, and to draw attention and thought to the imperative necessity—

a—Of diligence to be up to date
b—Knowledge of what is going on over the world.

c—Foresightedness.

d—Celerity of movements.

All these things are positive-ly essential to keeping this different kind of a clean, fresh store.
